THE CLOWN

DEAD BY DAYLIGHT™

THE CLOWN

The son of an alcoholic father, Jeffrey was a withdrawn child with peculiar curiosities. Fascinated with feathers, he would spend hours alone transfixed with the regularity of their barbs, running their softness over his lips. Ingratiating himself with a dentist, he procured a small amount of anesthetic, and rigged it to a bird feeder. After some failed attempts, he captured a bird and, slowly tightening his grip upon it, squeezed the panicked creature until it ruptured. Over time, he went after larger prey such as squirrels, racoons, dogs—and even a young boy. But when his father discovered his work, he ran, never to return home.

He fell in with a travelling circus and was hired to work the ropes. As old urges returned, he stole clothes and make-up from performers, fashioning a disguise that would get him close to his victims before anaesthetizing them. Men, women, young, old, he didn't care. He would bring them to his caravan where they would awake, bound and at his mercy.
